

Sky City Chronicle

New boots make Hugo Hog hopping mad!

They are funky, eco-friendly and they come in all sizes and colours... the Spring Sunshine Water Boots are the latest craze to hit Sky City – and Hugo Hog is not happy.

"No one wants to drive my Hog Cars anymore," stated Hugo Hog, who saw the last of his factories close this week. "Everyone wants these new boots. They even come with a free toy. It's really not fair!"

The Spring Sunshine Water Boots were designed by Adam Langley from St Mary's Church of England School, Swanley. His design was posted to the Sky City Chronicle offices in answer to our competition to find a better, more eco-friendly form of transport for Sky City.

Eve Green, Head of the Environment, commented: "I was jumping for joy when I saw the design. Each boot is fitted with springs to ensure that everyone gets a good workout as they bounce around the city. The environment also benefits, as the boots come with their own sprinkler system to keep the flowers healthy and happy. Blooming marvellous!"

Thanks to the popularity of the new boots, less and less Hog Cars are clogging the streets of the city, and the smog is starting to clear. Perhaps one day we will see that sun again!

Breaking news: inside the Sludge River factory

A member of environmental group Eco-justice has managed to get inside the Sludge River factory. They were able to take the following photograph before they were discovered and had to flee the scene. Does this photograph give a clue as to what the factory is producing?

Eve Green, Head of the Environment, is worried about the local river and wildlife: "The factory is always pumping green waste into the water and smoke into the sky. It is not healthy for our island. Whatever the factory is making, it must be stopped immediately."

Baron Von Toxic, the owner of the factory, was unavailable for comment.

ILLUSTRATIONS © HOWARD MCWILLIAM